

Christmas Cove

Marina Entrance

35° 43.1'S 137° 56.0'E

Shelter from All Directions

Note The marina entrance position is for reference only and should not be used as a waypoint.

This small cove is a useful refuge when severe weather is forecast. However, great care is needed by keel boats as the depth is shallow in places. Particular care is needed in the entrance which is known to be a problem at low tides. Although the marina is sheltered from all directions once a vessel is inside and tied up, the entrance is dangerous to attempt in strong winds from the west and north west.

[Note – a section will be added here with details of services and contact information]

In south easterly conditions it is possible to anchor just south west of the headland, and the holding is good.
